

On March 20, 1969, Asian American Studies at San Francisco State University was born and became the first AAS program in the United States when a settlement was signed at San Francisco State College to establish the country's first and still only School (now College) of Ethnic Studies.

This collection presents for the first time the direct, unfiltered description of the journey of the founding members of Asian American Studies – joined by those who followed – in their own words. For forty years, the initiators of AAS have struggled to develop an academic discipline out of nothing. More importantly, they have fought to uphold the revolutionary values of the Strike to make academe accountable to the people and the community. Welcome to their journey: from the beginning to the present, and the unpredictable possibilities for the future of Asian American Studies.
